ACT I

Saturday Afternoon

ACT II

Saturday Evening

ACT III

Sunday Morning

'One of the gayest, brightest, most amusing entertainments in London', said The Era. "the audience were delighted" concluded The Times, 'and insisted on a speech of thanks from Mr. Coward, who claimed that his play, whether it pleased or wearied, was at any rate "as clean as a whistle". Be that as it may, it certainly did not weary'.

On Sunday James Agate:

Mr. Coward began it, as they say, with his talk of whistles.... As a piece of brilliant impudent and sustained fooling the play is very pleasant entertainment and well enough "made" to delight a Frenchman. And then there is the dialogue for which Mr. Coward's simile would be much more apt. This is clean indeed in the sense that it is whittled and pared to an admirable fineness.... I venture to suggest that many moral plays are not enlivened with such delicate imbecility.
