Old Times

by Harold Pinter

When they queued all night for the Proms at the Albert Hall and for ballet at Covent Garden when Odd Man Out was the film you HAD to see, two young girls shared digs in London. Now, after many years, a reunion takes place between Ann and Kate, now married to Deeley.

The visit stirs memories of old times in all three — what it was really like then or was it? Yet, as the play progresses, it becomes clear that what is stirred in them is more than nostalgia and memory — it is also an awareness of the gulfs between them.
